The decision doesn't solve anything. It makes the problem worse. Microsoft will donate everything, but I'm sure at some point Microsoft is going to try to get thier piece of the pie. If the schools are poor to begin with why let Microsoft take advantage of them? If Microsoft is a monopoly why let them extend the reach. I think Red Hat hit the nail on the head. So much more could be done with the money. Let open source software be introduced. Promote competition. That is all you hear about, Microsoft is destroying competition and the you see a ruling like this. This is the opportunity that open source software has been waiting for. Don't take it away.
